ABOUT AARON

Aaron Malloy is Founder and CEO of Paralign Health, a company focused on helping emergency medical services (EMS) agencies expand beyond emergency response into sustainable models of preventive, in-home, and community-based care.

An EMT and healthcare innovator, Malloy works at the intersection of healthcare delivery, technology, and public policy, advancing approaches that improve access to care in rural and resource-limited communities. Prior to founding Paralign Health, he advised healthcare organizations, public agencies, and EMS providers on strategy, operations, workforce development, and healthcare transformation initiatives. His experience spans frontline EMS, health system innovation, and the development of scalable care models designed to improve outcomes while reducing barriers to care. As Florida's Rural Health Transformation Program advances, Paralign Health and CommHIT Everywhere are working together to strengthen the future of community paramedicine/mobile integrated health (CP/MIH). Together, the organizations are working with EMS agencies to strengthen their role in healthcare delivery, connect them to new care models, and create pathways for reimbursement of MIH-initiated services. This approach helps rural EMS agencies strengthen long-term sustainability and provide needed care in the communities they serve. Malloy holds degrees from the National University of Ireland, Galway and the University of Notre Dame.
